

Abstract

A survey has been carried out recently to collect and analyse data relating to the installed quantities of AC and DC underground and submarine cable systems rated at 60 kV and above. Information regarding the service experience and the performance of the main types of underground and submarine cable systems has been collected and analyzed. Trends in cable and accessory technology and changes in modes of installation have been identified. Failure rates for different types of cable system are calculated and typical repair times given.